- 2Q26 GDP growth surprised to the upside in Indonesia, but downside in the Philippines
- Headline CPI inflation undershot expectations in Indonesia, the Philippines and Thailand
- Indonesia's gross FX reserves dropped slightly in July, and trade deficit persisted in June
- President Prabowo reportedly nominated Destry Damayanti as one of the new BI Governor candidates

Amid a week of data dumps, Indonesia was in focus for the leadership transition at the central bank. Senior Deputy Governor Damayanti was reportedly nominated by the President to Parliament as a BI Governor candidate.¹ This signals some degree of policy continuity, in our view, although some uncertainty around the policy outlook may persist in the near term.

The slight decline in gross FX reserves in July also reduced concerns about the risk of a credit rating downgrade, after a warning by Fitch recently. We raised our 2026 GDP growth forecast for Indonesia this week, but lowered it for the Philippines, while raising Indonesia's current account deficit for 2026.

Indonesia: Cautious 2H26 outlook

GDP growth moderated to 5.3%oya in 2Q26 (1Q26: 5.6%), above expectations, supported by strong public sector spending (Figure 1). We raised our 2026 GDP growth forecast to 5.0% (consensus: 5.0%) from 4.7%, reflecting stronger 1H26 outturns. We still expect GDP growth to slow to 4.6%oya in 2H26 from 5.4% in 1H26 amid tighter fiscal and monetary conditions.

1. "Prabowo readies Bank Indonesia picks with Destry favoured," Bloomberg, 7 August 2026.

We also raised our current account deficit forecast to 1.7% of GDP (Figure 2) from 1.0% (consensus: 1.2%), mainly reflecting still-elevated fuel imports. Import growth surged 34.3%oya from 22.2%, reflecting sustained energy imports alongside strong machinery and electronics. Export growth rebounded to 8.8%oya from -5.7%, led by commodities, while non-commodity exports remained weak. As a result, the goods trade balance remained in deficit, at US$0.5bn in June from US$1.6bn in May.

Source: CEIC, J.P. Morgan

Headline CPI inflation fell to a lower-than-expected 2.9%oya in July from 3.3% in June, driven by a sharp decline in food price inflation. Core inflation was unchanged, at 2.8%, but this masked broader price pressures beyond the decline in gold jewelry prices (Figure 3). We maintain our 2026 headline inflation forecast of 3.4% but see upside risks to our core inflation forecast of 2.5% amid the weakening IDR.

Source: CEIC, J.P. Morgan

Our baseline remains for BI to pause in August before hiking again by another 25bp in September, to 6.00%. While we expect FX pressures to persist, we acknowledge that the uncertainty around the policy outlook is rising owing to the leadership transition. Gross FX reserves declined, but only slightly, to US$145.3bn in July from US$145.6bn in June (Figure 4). Our BI-FX Pressure Index (BI-FXPI) is near 1.0 z-score, the level that tends to correspond with a tightening bias.

Source: Bloomberg Finance L.P., CEIC, J.P. Morgan. We estimate net FX reserves by subtracting short-term foreign currency liabilities and forward positions from gross reserves.

Thailand: Lower than expected CPI

Headline inflation fell more than expected, to 1.9%oya in July from 2.4% in June, reflecting another decline in retail fuel prices. Core inflation edged up less than expected, to 1.3%oya from 1.2%, while underlying price pressures continued to broaden (Figure 5). We reiterate our headline inflation forecasts of 1.9% for 2026 (BOT: 2.8%) and 1.5% for 2027 (BOT: 1.4%), implying negative real rates through 2027.

We maintain our BOT policy-rate forecast at 1.00% through 2027, as the still-below-potential growth outlook warrants continued policy support. Based on our constructive growth view, we continue to see upside risk of 50bp of hikes in 2027, taking the policy rate toward a neutral level.

Source: CEIC, J.P. Morgan.

Note: Our core-core inflation excludes food, rent, utilities and public transport.

Philippines: GDP and CPI miss expectations

Real GDP slowed to 2.3%oya in 2Q26, significantly undershooting expectations (JPM: 3.1%oya; consensus: 2.9%oya). The drag came primarily from a relapse in public construction activity, as governance issues continue to affect the implementation of infrastructure projects. Private sector domestic demand displayed some resilience, with household consumption and services spending recovering sequentially from 1Q26. We downgraded our 2026 GDP forecast from 4.0% to 3.5% to reflect the 2Q26 GDP miss, but expect a sequential recovery in 2H26 (Figure 6) as the drag from public construction activity subsides and private sector activity recovers from the initial shock of the Middle East conflict.

Source: CEIC, J.P. Morgan forecast in shaded region

July headline inflation (6.2%oya) also slightly missed expectations (JPM: 6.3%oya; consensus: 6.4%oya), largely reflecting lower oil prices and administrative price controls that continue to suppress spillovers into the broader consumer basket. However, we note that inflation momentum may pick up again due to the removal of the price cap on imported high-grade rice, steeper electricity tariff hikes and potential El Niño developments. We maintain our 2026/27 headline inflation forecasts at 5.6%/4.3%, with the return to target expected only in mid-2027 (Figure 7).

Source: CEIC, J.P. Morgan forecast in shaded region

The combination of a weaker-than-expected GDP and a softer, but still materially above-target CPI print may appear to complicate the BSP's policy stance. We still expect the central bank to hike in the next three meetings, but will keenly monitor how the weak 2Q GDP outturn affects its longstanding hawkish guidance since the Middle East conflict.
